Treated Lumber >>

CULPEPER is a family-owned business with a clear mission: to serve our customers with a full line of consistently high-quality products. Our strategy is simple: we strive for the highest standards of professionalism and we hold ourselves to the highest standards of moral and ethical business conduct. And we're deeply committed to providing the best, most responsive service in the business.

CULPEPER offers the range of products and depth of experience you want from a company dedicated to its customers. CULPEPER is among the largest pressure-treated lumber companies in the United States. Each year, we ship approximately 500 million board feet of lumber to our customers from our eight strategically located plants.

When it comes to pressured-treated wood, it's the small things that make the difference. At CULPEPER, we start right from the beginning. Our inspectors examine every incoming load of lumber for bright, fresh, smooth appearance, as well as for grade and moisture content. To eliminate rusting and scarring, we reband every bundle with color-coded synthetic straps, positioned uniformly along the wood. After treatment, we take borings from every charge and analyze them in our quality control laboratory to ensure they meet the standards of the American Wood Preservers' Association. Not only do we store most of our pressure-treated wood under roof, but we have paved our yards and installed steel runners to help keep our stacks of lumber orderly and clean.

The result: our pressure treated wood looks as bright when it leaves our plant as when it first arrived.

*"We're in the business of delivering bright, clean pressure-treated lumber.
Wood that doesn't meet these standards doesn't leave our yards."*
