Structural Framing Materials

On one level it's a combination of the largest collection of proven building products, the means to distribute them efficiently combined with the greatest collection of technical support and software in the building industry.

But it's more than that. A lot more.

Now one phone call connects you to your point person who leads a coordinated sales team for access to everything you need. This single point of contact means fast access and fast answers. Dealers immediately are in a much better position to help their builder customers. They can use iLevel's software to optimize structural performance and to cut jobsite waste. For builders the deeper inventories and better-tracked deliveries mean that their crews are less likely to be sitting around waiting for material. And if there's a problem that needs to be resolved, your iLevel person has the power to do it. iLevel helps dealers and builders run their businesses more efficiently and to build better performing houses. And at the end of the day helping build homes that people want to buy is our business.

It's good now, but soon iLevel will do even more.

In the coming months we'll help clean up your desk by streamlining processes and cutting your paperwork. Soon we'll also introduce an integrated structural frame solution that will take home construction to a new level of efficiency and performance. Companies have claimed to have "whole house" solutions before, but this will go well beyond anything currently available. We can't wait. Bet you can't either.
